

Working American families need tax relief. Tax cuts are fine, as long as they are paid for and don't add to the enormous federal budget deficit and the debt burden we are placing on our children.

I strongly favor eliminating many of the special provisions in the tax law that have made it incredibly complicated and often biased against average taxpayers. However, I will not support proposals which pretend to provide tax relief to middle class working families, but in reality wind up increasing the share of taxes paid by families of average means while lowering the tax burden for the most well-to-do members of society.

Return to Dave's Stand on the Issues